Gone are the days of teach to the middle. Same as gone are the days where teacher gave an instruction and students automatically followed the instruction. Today's classroom is far more complex with each student expected to show significant progress over the year.

So as the teacher, how do you maintain an ordered and balanced class without tearing your hair out trying to maintain 20 plus individual plans and behaviour systems? How do teachers and TAs work smarter and more confidently with playing the balancing act of curriculum vs classroom management?

In this session, we will give practical tips and examples of how to maintain behaviour management that is focused towards positive classroom learning behaviours and habits. It will focus on how support staff and teaching staff all have a part to play, without it being an overwhelming mission.
